Gives an Exhibition of Vocal Pyrotechnics That Astounds the Manhattan Opera-House =

No matter how strongly one might feel that vocal calisthenies and down the food only weakens the organs alpyrotechnics were a small factor in forced to repeat a part of the scene.

Small wonder that the house went wild over her. Not even at her debut was there such applause. Only one bouquet was thrown at her, it was true, while many fell at her feet then; but all over the densely packed house for minute after minute the cheers rose and fell and rose again. In vain she came before the curtain and bowed and smiled and kissed her hand. Still the uproar kept up. She dragged Mr. Handman after time she tripped to the footlights in a queer little run, looking for all the world like a big blond French doll in her night dress, that was heavy with more sober minded began to hiss down the demonstration.

Small wonder that the house went was and now I come to the point of my article—there is no use, for there is a simpler way for solving the problem of reducing the fat. Tetrazzini s task was harder as Lucia than that at her first appearance last Wednesday as Violetta in Verdi's "La Traviata." Then she was a stranger, and the New York public is always generods in its treatment of a newcomer. But last night the great audience that assembled to near her-greater than ever because the standing room had that assembled to near her—greater than ever, because the standing room had been extended to the very limit of police forbearance—was in a calmiy crutcal mood, it exacted the supreme test. The singer was weighed in the balance with her illustrious predecessors of living memory. She stood it well and was not found wanting. Her marvellous exhibition of skill in the mad scene satisfies the most cauthous. histition of skill in the mad scene satisnea the most captious.

The new star's triumph was not woneasily. She was not well, and under ordinary circumstances might have avoided the trial. But too much was at stake, both for her and for Mr.
Hammerstein. Wisely she husbanded her resources at the beginning. At her first appearance in the park to keep her tryst with Edgardo she made no great impression. In the following episode with her brother, before the signing of the marriage contract, she was only a little more effective. But ween Edgardo forced his way into the great betrothal scene she began to show her mettle. Then both her singing and her acting rose to a high level. In the sex-

An Excellent Cast. Mr. Hammerstein had surrounded his prize songbird with an exceptionally strong supporting cast. Zenatello was the most impassioned Edgardo seen for a long time. Perhaps he over-acted a bit in the hig acene of the second act, but his singing was altogether admirable. So was that of Sammarco, who, perhaps, made of Ashton less of the merciless, self-seeking brother than the character demands. Arimondi was a sonorous Haimundo, and Venturini as Arture and Daddi as Normando were satisfactory. The chorus sang well and really seemed to show concern over the madness of Lucia, Campanini shared in two or three curtain calls.

Moving about inside the house was almost impossible, so thick and unyielding was the mass of standees. Before the first curtain the carriage line extended to Forty-second street, and the crowd in front o- the main entrance in Thirty-fourth street reached to Eighth avenue, making the way difficult for people who came afoot.

It was a great night for Tetrazzini and for Mr. Hammerstein. Mr. Hammerstein had surrounded i

To-night will be "Tammany Hall Night" at the Irish Exposition in Madison Square Garden. Headed by Charles F. Murphy the entire Wigwam will move upon the Garden. The Sullivans—Big Tim" and "Little Tim"—and all their lieutenants from the Bowery will be on hand, and many member—of the Board of Aldermen, led by President McGowan, will be present. There will be special decorations at the Garden and the musical programme and exercises of the evening will be of a fitting character. The headquarters of the Tammanyites for the occasion will be in Kate Kearney's cottage. The Murphy will receive all the braves in the room in which the famous Irish beauty Kate Kearney received her guests in her roadhouse on the road to Killarnev—or rather in a replica of the room, for the cottage is a reproduction of the famous roadhouse.
